

PAIN MANAGEMENT

Pain management billing is anything but routine. Unlike standard claim denials such as those due to missing information or duplicate submissions, pain management claims face a unique set of challenges that require deep domain expertise.

From frequency limitations and peer-to-peer reviews to evolving documentation requirements, even small oversights can result in denials and revenue loss. For instance:

- 1 Repeat procedures or escalation of treatment without supporting documentation or trial of alternatives may lead to scrutiny.
- 2 Improper use of modifiers or billing multiple services on the same day without clear justification can trigger rejections.

- 3 Lack of specificity in diagnosis coding can call into question medical necessity especially for services governed by Medicare criteria.

Navigating this landscape requires more than just submitting claims. It requires a trusted advisor who understands the nuances of pain management billing and ensures compliance while protecting your bottom line.
